Vitamin D Boosts Immune System

With the recent flu outbreak, people are looking for ways to stay healthy. Recent research suggests that Vitamin D supplements can help. Vitamin D is also known as the sunshine vitamin. Dr. Michael Holick is responsible for much of this research along with a good deal of anecdotal evidence supporting his findings.

According to a release from Oregon State University, "Vitamin D deficiency is an issue of growing concern among many scientists, due to changing lifestyle or cultural trends in which many people around the world get less sun exposure and often inadequate dietary levels of the vitamin. It's a special problem with the elderly, which often have reduced exposure to sunlight and less ability to produce vitamin D in their skin - and at least partly as a result, are more susceptible to bone fractures, chronic inflammation and infectious disease." http://www.eurekalert.org/pub_releases/2009-08/osu-kfo081809.php

Although the U.S. RDA is 200 I.U., many physicians recommend 1,000 to 2,000 or more I.U. of Vitamin D a day to maintain adequate levels of the vitamin in the blood stream. It is also suggested that since Vitamin D is retained in fat, heavier people should increase the dosage.

Vitamin D is actually a hormone that is used by many systems in the body, one being the cells that kill and dispose of bacteria, viruses and other pathogens, another being the cells that produce insulin. There are also many other health benefits to having adequate levels of the vitamin.

Too much Vitamin D can be toxic, but those amounts are very high and would require many times the normal dose.

When people get adequate sun, about 30 minutes at noon in June or July, no supplement is needed. During that time, the skin makes about 10,000 I.U. of the vitamin, naturally a safe dose.

During most of the year, one cannot get adequate doses of Vitamin D in N.W. Illinois. It has even been considered the reason people in northern climes have more cancer.

Vitamin D is a relatively low-cost vitamin to purchase. It is not found in adequate levels in most foods except when fortified. For more information, search the Web (<http://www.vitaminDcouncil.org/>). As always, ask your health care provider what is best for you to maintain good health.

I have always admired the ability to bite off more than one can chew and then chew it.

— William Demille
